

Group Boards: Joining and Creating Group Boards

Reasons to Join Group Boards

Most of the reasons for joining group boards are based on the fact that once you join a group board, that board shows up on your profile. Of course, that means the group board also shows up on all the other group pinners' profiles.

And the pins to the group board also show up on the timelines of all the followers of every group pinner. That's a lot of exposure over and above the actual followers of the group board.

Below are a few reasons to join group boards on Pinterest.

1. You are immediately exposed to thousands of new people with every image you pin to the group board. Again, those who follow the board will be exposed to your pins. And the people who follow the other pinners who pin to that group board will also be exposed to your pins.
2. A number of those people who are exposed to your group pins will choose to follow you (and probably all your boards and, thus, they will be exposed to all of your other pins).
3. As new people follow the board, join as group pinners, or repin from the board, you can follow those people on Pinterest (and hope they will follow you).
4. Even on the days you don't add pins of your own, the people who follow you will still be exposed to you and your Pinterest profile via the pins from other group pinners.
5. You can maximize your on-going activity on Pinterest through your own pins and those group pinners on any group boards you belong to.
6. You can discover some wonderful new pins (new content) from other group pinners that you could pin to other boards you have, thus keeping those boards more active as well.

Note: You cannot be invited to a group board if you don't follow that board (or the person who owns the board). Pinterest will not allow a board owner to invite you unless you are following the board you want to join.

Create Your Own Group Boards

Besides joining other people's group boards, you should create a few group boards of your own. Those group boards will get you more followers, more pins on your profile timeline, and more activity on your Pinterest profile. And, as a plus, you control the board, the group pinners, and the board description and board image.

It's easy to create a group board. Simply click on the red invite button on any board you own (see the image below).

Great Quotations as Graphics

I love when quotations are presented as graphics. Such graphical quotes make quotations far more interesting than just words. Web source: <http://www quotablebooks.com>

Click on the people on the left (below image) who you want to invite. They will be added to the group on the right.

If you'd like to remove someone you had previously invited, you can simply click the remove button next to anyone on the right who you want to delete as a group pinner.

Group Boards You Might Want to Join

Below are some of the group boards you might want to join. Because we emphasize creating and pinning QuoteGraphics and Tip-O-Graphics, many of the following group boards focus on quotes, sayings, positive words, and quotations.

Note: Check the number of pinners on the right of each board image as well as the number of pins and the number of followers for each group board.

Your first priority should be the number of followers on each group board. The more followers, the better the group board.

Your second priority should be checking on the number of group pinners. The more group pinners, the most people your pins will be exposed to. But also the more pins that will likely be pinned to the group board each day. Remember: Each group pinner probably has a thousand or more followers, so a group with 870 group pinners could have as many as 870,000 followers!

Your third priority should be to check the number of pins. The more pins on a group board, the more competition you have for the visibility of your pins. Too many pins can affect the quality of the group board and the visibility of all pins on that group board.

On each group board below, we tell you how to ask to join: Comment on any pin. Send an email. Ask via comment on another board owned by the group board owner. Etc.

Here are some other group boards you might be interested. Note: I did the research for the below group boards about two years ago, so I don't know if everything is still accurate.

GARDENS

The Just A man who, as Voltaire wished, cultivates his garden. He who is grateful that music exists on earth. He who discovers an etymology with pleasure. A pair in a Southern café, enjoying a silent game of chess. The potter meditating on colour and form. The typographer who set this, though perhaps not pleased. A man and a woman reading the last triplets of a certain..... He who prefers the others to be right. These people, without knowing, are saving the world. Jorge Luis Borges
